

What is IAAP Student Division?

IAAP Student Division or Division 15 of the IAAP (International Association of Applied Psychology) was created during the year 2002, and was formally approved at the General Assembly of the IAAP in Singapore, August 2002.

The mission of the Division 15 is to promote and support a network of students who share a common interest in international development, teaching, trends, applications, and research in applied psychology.

It is important that students as future psychologists have an international exposure and start networking with their counterparts from all over the world in order to exchange and share scientific knowledge and to promote international, cross-cultural research.

The Student Division is trying to create a functional link between students not only through internet – webpage and mailing list – but also through the organization of student activities at different national, regional, and international congresses and a periodical online publication of our Newsletter.

Membership fee for students is only 10$! Please visit www.iaap-sy.org for more information about how to apply for the IAAP membership.

What are the advantages of joining IAAP and IAAP-SD?

There are several advantages. The first of all is that you join a network of psychology students who share a common interest: applied psychology. We have a mailing list, discussion forums and a newsletter where information can be exchanged and ideas debated. You also have reduced fees for all Student Division activities (such as workshops, forums, conferences).

Finally, the Student Division is a division of IAAP, which has additional advantages, such as:

1. Four issues per year of the journal "Applied Psychology: An international review" and IAAP Newsletter
 2. Reduced subscription rates for all Blackwell Publishing psychology journals and many other journals
 3. Reduced fees for the international congresses organized by IAAP.
